DRAFT SUMMARY FOR REVIEW
September 2014
Arts Education in Arizona Public Schools for the 2012/2013 School Year

An Analysis of the Arizona Highly Qualified Teacher Database

Quadrant Research was provided with the 2012/2013 Highly Qualified Teacher (HQT) data tables for each of the four arts disciplines (dance, music, theatre and visual arts). In addition, Quadrant had access to the 2008/2009 HQT data for music and visual arts to allow for comparative analysis between the two periods (2009 vs. 2013).

The Universe of Schools

The 2012/2013 HQT data file was compared to the list of all schools (both district and charter schools) available from the Arizona Department of Education serving grades K-12. The data files were reviewed, cleaned and compared with information from the Arizona Department of Education to develop the universe of schools and teachers for this report. For the purposes of this report, for the 2012/2013 school year there were:

1844 Total Schools with 1,048,503 students
1339 District Schools with 902,064 students
505 Charter Schools with 146,439 students

The Universe of Teachers and Assignments

The data provided contained 3,190 teachers with one or more assignments in an arts discipline (defined as dance, music, theatre and visual arts) for a total of 3,980 assignments.

Limitations of the Data

This data is part of a self-reporting process by Arizona’s schools on all of their teaching positions to the Arizona Department of Education. In 2003, Arizona chose to define the Core Academic Area of the Arts to mean music and visual arts for purposes of the HQT data reporting. As a result, theatre and dance teachers, while captured in the reporting of all teachers in the state, do not have their own tracking within the data collection system, and are therefore difficult to extract from the entirety of teacher records accurately.
Primary Observations

Based on the data provided by the Arizona Department of Education from the 2012/2013 HQT data file and the comparison to the 2008/2009 HQT data file and analysis we are able to conclude that the overall condition for arts education, as measured by schools with teacher assignments and overall student access to arts instruction, is improving.

Key Highlights:

• The percentage of students with access to arts education has improved (89% up from 87% in 2009).

• The number of students without access to any arts education has declined by 18,716 students to a total of 115,487.

• There has been significant increase in arts education in Charter Schools with the percentage of students with access to either music or visual arts growing from 42% to 60%. However, Charter Schools still lag District Schools along most measures.

• Music and visual arts remain the most common of the arts disciplines (accessible to 84% and 74% of students respectively). Access to dance and theatre remains significantly lower at 16% and 15% of students with access respectively.

• A greater percentage of schools and students have access to both music AND visual arts.

• There was an overall net gain of teachers in the arts although there was a decline in the number of arts assignments.

• Music teachers account for the vast majority of arts teachers assigned to more than one school with 23% of all music teachers serving multiple schools (25% of music teachers in district schools and 9% in charter schools).

• Smaller schools, regardless of school configuration, are less likely to offer arts education.

• The majority of students without access to arts education tend to be at the elementary level for District schools and spread across Elementary, High and K-8 level for Charter Schools.
