Federal funding opportunities may be available due to the closure of military installations in your state and community.

Base closings can be met with anger and disbelief in some communities, and acceptance and hope in others. For local arts organizations and related cultural groups with a forward-looking perspective, a base closing can be a chance to revitalize your community through the arts and culture.

It is through the base closing process and its expected dynamic of planning that we direct your attention to a great opportunity for a local arts organization to find a new home, new venue, new gallery space, new museum, new funding, and an improved quality of life for the community.

2005 BRAC

BRAC, or the Base Realignment and Closure Commission, is the congressionally authorized process that the U.S. Department of Defense uses to reorganize its base structure to more efficiently and effectively support U.S. forces, increase operational readiness, and facilitate new ways of doing business. The Department of Defense held four previous rounds of base closures and realignments in 1988, 1991, 1993, and 1995.

As of November 2005, 27 states will have had major base closures or realignments as a result of the 2005 BRAC process. A complete list of installation names is attached, but the affected states are:

- Alaska
- California
- Florida
- Georgia
- Idaho
- Illinois
- Indiana
- Kansas
- Kentucky
- Louisiana
- Maine
- Massachusetts
- Michigan
- Mississippi
- Missouri
- New Jersey
- New Mexico
- New York
- North Carolina
- North Dakota
- Oregon
- Pennsylvania
- Texas
- Utah
- Virginia
- Washington
- Wisconsin

The base closings in these states will result in the loss of thousands of Department of Defense civilian jobs and the end of much of the current economic activity that these bases maintain. However, through the last four BRAC rounds, the Department of Defense—along with the U.S. Department of Labor, the Federal Aviation Administration, and the Economic Development Administration—have provided $1.6 billion in coordinated grant assistance. These funds were part of the local economic recovery strategy that was led by the Defense Department’s Office of Economic Adjustment (OEA).
“Redevelopment can also be the single most important opportunity for an affected community to overcome the impacts of a realignment or closure while building upon community strengths and vision. Each community response is unique and reflects the impacts on local businesses, workers, and other community components. Redevelopment creates an opportunity for the community to achieve multiple goals. For instance, a community may diversify the local economy by creating new businesses and jobs, expanding the tax base, and satisfying a range of community needs for new public facilities.” [“Responding to Change: Communities & BRAC,” OEA]

Starting in November, 2005, each base will establish a Local Redevelopment Authority (LRA) and build a planning organization of local leaders, planners, community organizations, and investors to map out a strategy to convert existing military structures and land into buildings and offices for civilian use. The “Planning LRA” will submit a base reuse plan to the Department of Defense and the Department of Housing & Urban Development. Once the federal agencies have worked out the plan, an “Implementation LRA” will continue the redevelopment work at a local level to lease, sell, renovate, build, and remove parts of the installation.

Below is some data on the approximate timeframe for each step of the process based on previous BRAC closings. However, according to OEA staff, the 2005 BRAC process is expected to move much faster than it has in the past.

Note: Averages relate only to installations that reach the specified milestone.
Although the closing and full redevelopment of a military base can take the better part of a decade, there are short-term opportunities for the arts as well. As various facilities, such as aircraft hangars, are shut down, they can be leased or used as low-cost solutions to storage or performance spaces. These uses provide ways to launch cultural activities on a base while the plans for redevelopment are still underway.

Over time, LRAs can grow into arms of local government, or turn into new public authority entities. In either case, the initial steps of an LRA are born out of a series of local and regional public meetings that seek to capture a consensus vision. This vision can include a place for the arts.

A consensus vision can include a place for the arts.

Federal Funding Resources

Once established, the Local Redevelopment Authority becomes the managing authority for the redevelopment process. Two federal agencies provide key assistance: the Defense Department's Office of Economic Adjustment, which provides planning and organizational assistance grants; and the Commerce Department's Economic Development Administration (EDA), which makes grants for infrastructure and business development.

In addition to these grant programs, the Base Redevelopment and Realignment Manual has a great deal of practical information on Defense Department policies on land conveyance, the redevelopment plan process, leasing regulations, and other matters related to the operations on a military base.

Below is a list of some federal grant programs that LRAs can pursue:

OEAs Economic Transitions of BRAC Sites report tracks economic activity from military to civilian use at 73 locations adversely impacted by major BRAC closures or realignments. This report has provided insight into restructuring these bases. Here are some arts-related examples:

- Lowry AFB, Denver—The transformation of Lowry Air Force Base includes craft spaces in their new Montclair Recreational Center, dance classes at the Colorado Free University, and a significant public art program in Bayaud Park and throughout the facility. The Lowry Foundation incorporated history into its current designs and artwork.

- Glenview Naval Air Station, Glenview, IL—Glenview has been renamed “The Glen” and now houses the Kohl Children’s Museum and a 145-acre Gallery Park that includes an amphitheater and a cultural arts wing.

- Fort McClellan, Anniston, AL—McClellan promotes itself as a center for the arts, providing entertainment and educational opportunities for the region. Plans are to reach people that might not otherwise have the opportunity or exposure to these venues. The historic Post Recreation Center, one of the early McClellan buildings, is currently undergoing a $2 million dollar rehabilitation effort as a regional venue for the arts. The Alabama Symphony Orchestra now performs a summer concert series on the base. Executive director of the Alabama Symphony, Paul Ferrone, is thrilled about the new venue. "This is just a win-win situation in terms of reshaping and transforming a community. The arts have such a positive impact on doing that. It’s tourism. It’s economic development, quality of life, image, creating an identity for the community." [Joint Powers Authority, Fort McClellan, news release]

- Fort Benjamin Harrison, Lawrence, IN—In only three-and-a-half years, more than 100 percent of the nonmilitary jobs have been replaced. The Schneider Corporation, Indiana’s largest private-sector employer and largest architectural and engineering firm, relocated in October 2000. This creative-industry business employs more than 200 engineers, architects, and support personnel.

- Loring AFB, Limestone, ME—At Loring Air Force Base, the Loring Job Corps Center employs 140 staff and provides job training in painting, website design, and the culinary arts.

- Alameda Naval Air Station, Alameda, CA—The Navy has donated the U.S.S. Hornet to the Aircraft Carrier Hornet Foundation for use as a museum, a big band site, and a major film production center.

- Castle AFB, Merced, CA—Through the U.S. Air Force Heritage Program, communities and organizations are offered limited assistance in establishing air museums in which vintage military aircraft may be preserved. Accepting the challenge of restoring, maintaining, and displaying World War II, Korean War, and Vietnam Era aircraft, a group of dedicated enthusiasts in the Atwater-Merced area formed the Castle Air Museum Foundation, Inc., which is now a nonprofit organization.

Americans for the Arts is the nation's leading nonprofit organization for advancing the arts in America. With more than 45 years of service, it is dedicated to representing and serving local communities and creating opportunities for every American to participate in and appreciate all forms of the arts. With offices in Washington, DC, and New York City, and more than 5,000 organizational and individual members across the country, Americans for the Arts is focused on three primary goals: 1) to foster an environment in which the arts can thrive and contribute to the creation of more livable communities; 2) to generate more public- and private-sector resources for the arts and arts education; and 3) to build individual appreciation of the value of the arts.

In 2004, Americans for the Arts launched Americans for the Arts Action Fund, a 501(c)(4) non-profit organization, to serve as its political advocacy arm and a national voice for the arts. With more than 20,000 citizen members and 70,000 online activists, the Arts Action Fund is significantly expanding arts advocacy outreach in America to help make certain that arts-friendly public policies are adopted at the federal, state, and local levels.
