Annual Convention Early Registration Deadline

Join more than 1,000 arts and community leaders at the Americans for the Arts Annual Convention, June 14-16 in Pittsburgh, as we share innovative ways leaders are using the arts to build communities. Strategize how we can better communicate the essential impact that the arts offer to generate understanding and support for years to come.

The Convention is preceded by three preconferences (Emerging Leaders; Public Art Network; and Arts, Entertainment and Cultural Districts) and overlaps in Pittsburgh with the Three Rivers Arts Festival and Gay Pride.

The last chance to register for the Annual Convention at a discount is fast approaching—you must register by this Friday, May 31, to receive Advanced Registration savings of up to $75. After May 31, online registration closes, rates increase, and you’ll need to register onsite in Pittsburgh.

Making the Ask

When approaching individual donors, it’s normal to be anxious about asking directly for a gift, but asking for money doesn't have to be scary. Quell your trepidation in our workshop, in which our experts will provide a framework to help take the fear out of fundraising. Learn how to navigate the cultivation process, how to choose the right time to request a donation, and how to maximize the odds of a successful ask.

Forget The Mission Statement. What’s Your Mission Question?
Most companies articulate their missions by way of formal “statements.” But often they’re banal pronouncements or debatable assertions that don’t offer much help in trying to gauge whether a company is actually living up to a larger goal or purpose.

Reduce Churn and Build Patron Loyalty

Arts organizations (and businesses!) can reduce churn and build patron loyalty by adopting CRM (customer relationship management), which is both a philosophy of one-to-one marketing to customers and the technology that makes it possible. A CRM system integrates disparate activities (such as box office ticketing, fundraising, marketing, and your main customer database) that used to be in separate systems.

Patron Technology is offering a free whitepaper that will help you understand why CRM represents the next generation of technology for ticket-selling organizations, and shows how CRM will enable your organization to achieve six important business objectives quickly and easily.

Implementing CRM is easier—and more affordable—than you might think. Read Six Ways CRM Will Revolutionize Your Business to find out how you can start using CRM in your arts organization.
