Shared Values Inspire New Partnership for Audi and the Whitney Museum of American Art

The new Whitney Museum officially opens to the public this week in New York City’s meatpacking district after being housed uptown for nearly 50 years. Audi has signed on as the official automotive partner for the opening and will collaborate with the Whitney to support a variety of opening events throughout 2015 and 2016. In addition to providing transportation for the opening events, Audi will work with the Whitney to design a special Audi Lounge space at select events that will be reserved exclusively for Whitney members.

According to the official press release, partnering with the Whitney continues the Audi brand’s ongoing tradition of championing and supporting the arts and creating partnerships with likeminded organizations that stand for authenticity and a progressive mindset.

Art in a Changing New York
Join ELNYA in celebrating the life and work of Jane Jacobs with a walk from Long Island City to Astoria and a discussion about the role of public art in a changing New York. On this walk, discuss the future of public art in a New York City where condos and mixed-use buildings are quickly replacing the landmarks that have made art an entity of the people. The group will meet in Court Square Park, at the corner of Court Square and Jackson Avenue. From there, participants will make their way through Long Island City, stopping at the former location of 5 Pointz and MoMA PS1 and conclude at Socrates Sculpture Park in Astoria.

Blog Salon on Corporate Social Responsibility and the Arts

Business, community, and arts leaders will write about the role of arts in corporate social responsibility as part of Americans for the Arts blog salon from April 27–May 1. Recently, Americans for the Arts' Animating Democracy program released a new report, Corporate Social Responsibility and the Arts, which brings into relief the current landscape of corporate support for arts and culture. We will continue this conversation through this blog salon by highlighting other exemplary models and approaches that advance both healthy society and healthy business.

NYC Mayoral Corporate Service Recognition Program

Dear Arts Partners:

The Arts & Business Council of New York is pleased to share a new city-wide program designed to recognize your outstanding corporate volunteers for their impact at your organization. This was developed through collaborative efforts between NYC Service, the Arts & Business Council of New York, and other nonprofit coalition members.

Please read the message from NYC Service below and join us in this effort!

Thanks!
Arts & Business Council of New York

NYC Service is proud to announce the NYC Mayoral Service Recognition Program. NYC Service is working with a coalition of nonprofits to develop plans and policies to expand and deepen Corporate Volunteer Service and Pro Bono services. The coalition of nonprofits seeks to recognize our city’s most socially engaged corporations to build a city-wide movement of corporate service.

We are seeking corporate nominations. Corporations are being asked to complete this short survey* by Wednesday, April 22nd and must meet a minimum threshold of 20 percent employee engagement during 2014. Corporations who qualify will receive a Mayoral Service Recognition Certificate and will be invited to attend a special thank you event hosted by the Mayor’s Office.

We want to recognize and celebrate the impact corporations have on this city and highlight and thank corporations who work to promote, expand and deepen service.

*If you'd like a pdf version of the survey, please contact Amy Webb at awebb@artsandbusiness-ny.org
